

questions calculated to harrow up his soul. The cross-examiner found an entry in the blotter which was a card made by Meehan and Policeman Katz in which they arrested one Carrie Smith. The charge on the blotter was one impossible of proof and the woman was discharged.

"Did you swear out that warrant and make that charge knowing and with the intention of getting Carrie Smith discharged?"

"Blames It All to Katz," said the witness.

"Then you permitted Katz to make a false charge, although you were his superior officer, and let her escape?"

"Mr. Fromme objected that the girl escaped punishment because the Court did not consider the evidence sufficient on which to convict, and that was the law, and that one woman could keep a disorderly house in one room. The officer could not be held responsible because the judge decided otherwise."

"The objection was sustained, and Mr. Wellman returned to the witness stand."

"You have denied Mrs. Thuro's statement that you told her if the election went right you would make her a broom and put her up over her door in celebration of the victory?"

"Yes, sir."

"Now, notwithstanding that you deny that you ever told Mrs. Thuro that if the election went right you would make her a broom and put her up over her door in celebration of the victory, you nevertheless testified that you did tell her that?"

"I never arrested any one there. She was not living there."

"What! You even testified that you saw her fellow-officers that she did not see them, and that she was not living there, and yet you testified that you saw her fellow-officers that she did not see them, and that she was not living there?"

"Meehan hadly battled."

"What! You hadly battled guilty Nov. 27?"

"Well, I thought it had been turned into a furnished house."

"Now, your testimony indicates that it was running exactly as it had been when the woman was there. Sure, it was. She was in a position to know what kind of a house she kept, and she pleaded guilty."

"Meehan gave place to Capt. Michael Doherty, a handsome, broad-shouldered giant with a gentle voice."

"Capt. Doherty has a strong resemblance in his manner and attitude to 'Big Tom' Brennan, the ex-charities and ex-street-cleaning Commissioner."

"Capt. Doherty testified that he had been twenty-four years a policeman, and only four months a captain."

"He was asked if he had ever seen Mrs. Thuro before he was promoted to captain."

"He testified that he had seen her in the station house, and that he had seen her in the station house, and that he had seen her in the station house."

I don't see for the life of me how they got the evidence, but they did."

"The evidence was transferred to the Fifth Precinct in December, 1893."

"Capt. Doherty gets indignant."

"Did you ever shake hands with Mrs. Thuro, as told by Mrs. Thuro?"

"No, sir, I never shook hands with her. I only saw her once, and that was when she was in the station house."

"Did you ever tell her that if the election went right you would make her a broom and put her up over her door in celebration of the victory?"

Seventh Regiment Marksman to Shoot at Herr Zeitung To-Day.

Test to Be Made of the Inventor's New Bullet-Proof Armor.

Prominent Officers of the Militia Invited to Be Present.

Herr Zeitung the Vienna inventor of a bullet-proof armor, will allow a private test of the value of his invention to be made at the Seventh Regiment Armory, Sixth-seventh street and Fourth avenue, at a clock this afternoon.

Herr Zeitung claims that his armor has not only the merit of being light in point of invention to that of Herr Von Lennard, but that it is lighter, more flexible, and, without more, impenetrable than theirs. Herr Zeitung's armor is one and a half inches in thickness. It can be crumpled in the hand almost as readily as ordinary thick cloth, and weighs but little more than any woolen texture of its thickness.

The inventor of the armor, Herr Zeitung, is a man of about thirty years of age, and is a native of Vienna. He is a man of about thirty years of age, and is a native of Vienna. He is a man of about thirty years of age, and is a native of Vienna.
